How long does it take to obtain probate?

It's difficult to provide a general time frame as there are many things that can affect the process. On average it takes three to six months to get the necessary paperwork for the Probate Register but it can take longer - more than a year in some cases if the estate is complicated. Below is an outline of the process and, from our experience, how long it typically takes at each step.

	When all of the relevant information is available: Prepare IHT Account (two – three weeks after all the information is available). Prepare tax returns to the date of death (three – four weeks after receipt of all the information). Prepare the probate application (two – three weeks).	Once the executors have approved the IHT Account and probate papers: Inheritance Tax Probate Summary submitted to HM Revenue & Customs (HMRC), together with the IHT Account (within one week of receipt of the approved papers from the PRs).	Probate Application submitted: After HMRC issues the probate application code (usually within 20 working days after HMRC receives the IHT Account). Note: The application cannot be submitted until the code has been received from HMRC.	Obtaining the Grant of Representation (GOR): GOR issued (sixteen weeks).	When the GOR is received: Collect assets (three months – one year). Settle liabilities (three – four weeks after receipt of all the information). Prepare accounts (three weeks – one month from when the appropriate information is available). Register the estate on the Trust Register if appropriate (one – two weeks). Prepare estate tax return(s), if required (three – four weeks after receipt of all the information). Assent/transfer of assets to beneficiaries (two to three months – years). Typically, this step takes between three
